

What Drives Me?

BIG PICTURE

List 25 things you're curious about. Be super specific, the thing you're curious about the thing, topic, area, activity, subject, place...

After you've listed 25 things- don't stop at 24 – look for patterns. Where do your curiosities overlap? What if there could be overlaps? Look a little deeper to find connections.

Next step is to feed these curiosities -on a daily basis. Dive deeper, study, learn something tangible and specific about them. Lean into mastery of the thing, the topic, the intersection. Learn backgrounds, current events or scenarios about these curiosity overlaps and develop your idea of a possible future.

Next step is to start talking about it. Maybe with a stranger? Hear yourself talking about this topic, feeling your passion, curiosity, and lean in for mastery. Give yourself permission to speak it into the 'field.'

You're clearly someone who needs to have a big impact, feel like a measurable goal is being met, and feel driven and on purpose. The next step is to lean into an audacious goal for yourself. (the goal can be external impact though you are the creator so weave yourself in by creating the audacious goal for yourself.)

List 15 massive problems you want solved. Be super specific. You're tracking for an overlap with curiosity, passion and purpose.

Be careful with the programmed creator mind, the identity that needs to form a purpose identity around it all. A need to 'know how it's gonna be done' or 'how this fits into a neat career or next step.' What you're creating may take time and may begin with a smaller version as it expands and you hone your craft and mastery.
